Nanyang Academy of Fine Arts, Singapore

The Nanyang Academy of Fine Arts (NAFA) is one of the premier institutes of learning for arts in Singapore. Located in Bencoolen Street, Singapore, it houses hundreds of students learning to be our next generation of great artists. However, there is one problem. The sunny weather of Singapore is proving to be a bit of a hindrance to their study schedules. The glare and heat from the sun is making the classrooms and workshops of the campus unbearable at times.

Classis window film was called in to help remedy the situation. We proposed to cover the windows of the building with our High-Performance film with low light transmission. Maximum heat and glare reduction was needed to bring balance to the lighting conditions needed for their work and comfort level has to be restored in order to bring out the best of the students.

The teachers and students are now able to teach and learn at anytime during the day without having to resort to moving around the campus to avoid the unbearable glare and heat of the sun.
